Q.

Q is the seventeenth letter of the English Alphabet; an articulation borrowed from the oriental koph or qoph. It is supposed to be an articulation more deeply guttural than that of K; indeed it might have been pronounced as we pronounce qu: for we observe that, in the Latin language, from which the moderns have borrowed the letter, it is always followed by u, as it is in English. Q never ends an English word. Its name, cue, is said to be from the French queue, a tail.

As a numeral, Q stands for 500, and, with a dash, $\bar{Q}$, for 500,000.

Among mathematicians, Q. E. D. stands for quod erat demonstrandum, which was to be demonstrated.

In English, Q. is an abbreviation for question.

R

R is the eighteenth letter of the English Alphabet, and an articulation sui generis, having little or no resemblance in pronunciation to any other letter. But from the position of the tongue in uttering it, it is commutable with l, into which letter it is changed in many words by the Spaniards and Portuguese, and some other nations; as l is also changed into r. It is numbered among the liquids and semi-vowels, and is sometimes called the canine letter. Its English uses, which are uniform, may be understood by the customary pronunciation of rod, rose, bar, bare, barren, brad, pride, drown.—In words which we have received from the Greek language, we follow the Latins; who wrote h after r, as rhapsody, rheum, rhetoric.

As an abbreviation, R., in English, stands for rex, king, as George R.

As a numeral, R, in Roman authors, stands for 80, and, with a dash over it, R, for 80,000.

RA, as an inseparable prefix or preposition, is the Latin re, coming to us through the Italian and French, and primarily signifying again, repetition. See RE.

S.

S, the nineteenth letter of the English Alphabet, is a sibilant articulation, and numbered among the semivowels. It represents the hissing made by driving the breath between the end of the tongue and the roof of the mouth, just above the upper teeth. It has two uses; one to express a mere hissing, as in sabbath, sack, sin, this, thus; the other a vocal hissing, precisely like that of z, as in muse, wise, pronounced muze, wize. It generally has its hissing sound at the beginning of all proper English words, but in the middle and end of words, its sound is to be known only by usage. In a few words, it is silent, as in isle and viscount.

As a numeral, S. denoted seven.—In books of navigation and in common usage, S. stands for south; S. E. for south-east; S. W. for south-west; S. S. E. for south south-east; S. S. W. for south south-west, &c.

SHALL, SHAL (shal) v. i. verb auxiliary; pret. should. [Sax. scealan, scylan. Shall is defective, having no infinitive, imperative or participle.] 1. Shall is primarily in the present tense. We still use shall and should before another verb in the infinitive, without the sign to: but the signification of shall is considerably deflected from its primitive sense. It is now treated as a mere auxiliary to other verbs, serving to form some of the tenses.—In the present tense, shall, before a verb in the infinitive, forms the future tense; but its force and effect are different with the different persons or personal pronouns. Thus, in the first person, shall simply foretells or declares what will take place; as, I or we shall ride to town on Monday.—2. In the second and third persons, shall implies a promise, command or determination; as, you shall receive your wages.—3. Shall I go? shall he go? interrogatively, asks for permission or direction. But shall you go? asks for information of another's intention. 4. But after another verb, shall, in the third person, simply foretells; as, he says that he shall leave town to-morrow. So also in the second person: as you say that you shall ride to-morrow. 5. After if, and some verbs which express condition or supposition, shall, in all the persons, simply foretells.—6. Should, in the first person, implies a conditional event. 7. Should, though properly the past tense of shall, is often used to express a contingent future event; as, if it should rain to-morrow.

T.

T is the twentieth letter of the English Alphabet, and a close consonant. It represents a close joining of the end of the tongue to the root of the upper teeth, as may be perceived by the syllables at, et, ot, ut, in attempting to pronounce which, the voice is completely intercepted. It is therefore numbered among the mutes, or close articulations, and it differs from d chiefly in its closeness. The letters ti, before a vowel, and unaccented, usually pass into the sound of sh, as in nation, motion, partial. In this case, t loses entirely its proper sound. In a few words, the combination ti has the sound of the English ch, as in Christian, question.

T. as an abbreviation, stands for theologia; as, S. T. D. sanctæ theologiæ doctor, doctor of divinity.

As a numeral, T, among the Latins, stood for 160, and, with a dash over the top, T, for 160,000.

U.

U is the twenty-first letter and the fifth vowel in the English Alphabet. The first, or long and proper sound of u, in English, is now not perfectly simple, and it cannot be strictly called a vowel. The sound seems to be nearly that of eu, shortened and blended. This sound, however, is not precisely that of eu, or yu, except in a few words, as in unite, union, uniform; the sound does not begin with the distinct sound of e, nor end in the distinct sound of oo, unless when prolonged. It cannot be well expressed in letters. This sound is heard in the unaffected pronunciation of annuity, numerate, brute, mute, dispute, duke.—In some words, as in bun, full, pull, the sound of u is that of the Italian u, the French ou, but shortened. This is a vowel.—U has another short sound, as in tun, run, sun, turn, rub. This, also, is a vowel.
